HOME-FINDING ASSOCIATION FOR HOMELESS BABES.

What It Has Done in the Past in Placing Dependent Waifs.

Babies have been luxuries in the old days they were largely looked upon as inconveniences, but it has taken the twentieth century to convert them into a commodity. It may not be generally known, but the American Home-Finding Association, with offices at 167 Dearborn street, Chicago, will send a bill of babies—special attention to mail orders—into any family in Lake county that is without one of these well-springs of joy.

To be sure, the order must make good in the measure of presenting affidavits guaranteeing fitness to coach a baby into youth; and furthermore, if the baby is little, must adopt the same legally and forevermore. Older babies, babies who have arrived at years of discretion and knowledge—say eight years—are not necessarily adopted. They may be taken on the indenture plan, for they have arrived at an understanding of the fact that their foster parents are not their own real, true, papa and mama.

This home-finding institution was established in Chicago more than three years ago and is incorporated under the laws of the state. Dr. George K. Hoover has been its efficient general superintendent from the first. It has also state superintendents—they are mostly ministers whose duties are to scour their vicinities in search of dependent babies. When they find one they ship it to the home of the Association at Park Manor station in Chicago, where it is checked, bathed, and otherwise made presentable for future use. The institution has on hand now about nine babies, desirable in every way, whom they are waiting to place.

While babies are thus treated as a commodity by this unique association, there is no price placed upon them. No one pays anything for a baby, be it light or heavy, male or female. They have no baby bargain counter. The Home-Finding Association is supported by voluntary subscriptions. Every Sunday somewhere the state superintendents, as well as Dr. Hoover, receive permission from pastors to occupy perhaps a half-hour's pulpit time, when they address the congregation on the merits of the work and maybe follow this by taking up a collection. By these collections and voluntary contributions the Association is supported.

It will be seen that this plan is not the old-time English "farming out" scheme. Children turned over to the Association are given every care, medical attention being rendered, when necessary, by a resident physician, and nothing necessary to health is left undone. It is a great scheme, and a Godsend to those families which have no babies but desire them. With every baby goes a statement as to its parentage, so that the adopters may know the hereditary chances. Statistics show that there are many more babyless homes in America than there are dependent babies to fill them, and as a result the Association is receiving more orders than they can fill. The past season there has been quite a run on girl babies. They seem to be altogether preferred. It is hard to tell why. Perhaps they are prettier than the boys, and a mother, foster or otherwise, you know, loves her baby dearest if it is prettiest.

The Association publishes an official paper, "Our Homes and Our Homeless," a little monthly that tells the story of the institution from the beginning and affords those interested an opportunity of seeing the monthly reports of the officers. The Association does not advertise itself elsewhere than in its own magazine. During the three and a-half years of its organization it has secured home life for 377 children, 88 youths, 130 mothers each with a child, and 54 ex-prisoners. Ninety-two adults have been placed in homes and forty replaced. Many poor adults have been placed in homes where they could pay their way by their labor. That the subject of this article and similar organizations are so successfully engaged in such work is one of the great proofs of the increased enlightenment which marked the close of the nineteenth century. Hats For Horses.

The Washington Humane Society has been advocating the bonneting of draught horses, and has been so far successful that most of the horses used by large business firms in that city are now going about with bonnets on their heads. The head-gear in question is of straw, shaped like a farmer's hat, with two holes for the ears of the horse, and a brim wide enough to shade the eyes. It is tied neatly under the throat and may or may not have a damp sponge in the crown to keep the head of the animal cool.

The old-fashioned farmer may be inclined to laugh at this innovation, and declare that when he has any old hats to throw away he will put them on his scarecrows, but, after all, it is cheaper to buy a ten cent hat (actual cost) than to convey the horse to the stable when it has a sunstroke, and such an occurrence is by no means uncommon in any city during the hottest of a summer day. The hat will last for a considerable time, not being likely to go out of fashion or blow into the river, and it may save serious injury to a valuable animal.

However, conditions in the city of today are widely different from those of an old-fashioned farm. Large cities are comparatively modern affairs. Asphalt and stone paving, ten-story, not to say twenty-story buildings, and the multifarious excursions of modern commerce, were undreamed of not so very long ago. In old Edinburgh and London, there were no ice-carts, no delivery wagons, no wagons of any kind worth mentioning. When people bought anything they or their servants carried it home; refuse was left to accumulate indefinitely in front of the door, there to remain until there was a fire, the intricate network of business enterprise which invests the modern city was absolutely non-existent. The horse has only yesterday, as the history of the world goes, been introduced to conditions foreign and trying to him in the extreme. In his new environment he must trot all day over hard pavement, in the sun, between rows of tall buildings, or stand in the street for hours at a time with the sun beating down on him and the racket of wheels, street cars, street cries, and clattering hoofs all about him. Other animals are apt to die when transplanted to this environment; the horse lives, but his nervous system, almost human in its delicacy and complexity, is put under a severe strain. He can no more adapt himself to these conditions unaided by alleviations devised by man, than he can go unshod over the pavements as the mustang does on the prairie.

From a purely economic point of view it may be argued, therefore, that if the nervous strain on the horse in a city can be lessened, he will last longer and do more work. It is not necessary to dwell upon his sufferings if no steps are taken to make him comfortable, for the subject is rather a painful one, and the economic argument alone is enough. A horse is very much like a man in his inclinations and capabilities. If he is contented and free from nervous worry he will work hard and not feel it half as much as if he is continually harassed by petty torments. Horsemen know how quickly the temper of a horse is spoiled by teasing; and if all the things that irritate, worry, torment and madden anything that has nerves, intense heat is perhaps the most effective. It was once said that the temperature of the infernal regions would alone account for the character of their ruler if he had to live there all the year round. Heat in the crowded and noisy streets of a city, beating down upon the unprotected head of horse or man, causes, in a limited number of cases, fatal prostration, and in numerous instances, induces exhaustion, nervousness, irritability, bad temper, and loss of vitality. When the horse wears a hat those evils are to some extent averted. The hat is a good investment.

Former Constable W. J. Kelly, who was indicted for killing Fred Oberton, a bartender in a West Randolph street saloon, in Chicago last winter, was taken to the penitentiary Tuesday, by Jailer Whitman. Kelly was well known to many Antioch people and is the same man who accidentally shot William Burke on Grass Lake two years ago last October.

NORTHERN WISCONSIN DEVELOPMENT

That rapidly developing territory which comprises the northern half of Wisconsin is well known to the people of this State. It is in that State of partial development which gives great opportunity to bring about the highest point of perfection and prosperity. Good roads and other improvements are needed. All that is needed is a small capital. Its time brain, supplemented by push and energy, will make the iron ore, marl, kaolin and the timber and the rich soil, give equality to the settler and the manufacturer. It is cheap and can be purchased on easy terms.

THE WISCONSIN CENT

offers facilities for the quick and cheap transportation of its products and as the line is extended to the very center of this vast northern State the choice of location is not confined to any particular locality. Interesting pamphlets are being distributed describing this beautiful and rich thing can be obtained by addressing which has no nearer home than Chicago. Although badly shelled, the notes were easily identified, and the negro got the $100.

Another Washington negro not long ago took to the Treasury a large package of bills, which had been buried in the ground and were badly water-soaked. The bills were generally of small denomination, and the task of separating the pieces and patching them together was a big undertaking, as the amount of the resurrected roll was more than $3,000. The negro explained that he had buried the money to get it away from an "extravagant family," and that when he went to the place of burial to get out a small amount he found that the entire store had been ruined.

The work of identifying mutilated money is not always pleasant. One day last week an installment was received from Florida, with the explanation that it had been damaged in the fumigation of a house where a man had died from smallpox. Money found on people who have been drowned is frequently received, and its condition is usually such that it has to be picked to pieces and the fragments pasted on a backing of paper. The odor from money received in this manner is often offensive, and while working on a particularly bad job Mrs. Brown and Miss Smith frequently burn incense on their desks.

The history of the redemption of dollars of the Treasury is calculated to explode the theory that paper money is a great spreader of disease germs. An average of $5,000,000 of paper money in its worst forms of dirtiness is handled and counted three times every working day in the Treasury, without serious results.

South Carolina and the Federal government have a dispute over the question of whether the state is legally required to pay the U. S. special tax as wholesale and retail liquor dealers. Exemption is claimed because the dispensary is conducted by the state, but U. S. officials contend that as the state is in the liquor business it must comply with laws for the regulation of that business, just as individuals are compelled to do.

The government kept its promise to the letter and the volunteer army of the U. S. ended its existence June 30, but the fact seems to have been overlooked by the editors who were wildly charging a year ago that the volunteer army was to be used to throttle our liberties.

The imports of the Philippines were 88 per cent greater in 1900 than in 1899, and the increase in exports was also great—in 1899 $19,273,380, and in 1900 $56,781,464. Even with the shadow of the rebellion over them the prosperity of the islands under American control could not be kept down.

Northern Wisconsin Railroad Lands are increasing in value from year to year. Railroads are the great civilizers, for they give the settler as well as the manufacturer equal opportunity to work in undeveloped fields, thereby rapidly settling the country and bringing forth its undiscovered riches. Northern Wisconsin is rich in iron ore, clay, kaolin, sand, timber and fine farm lands. It has made many a settler independent and added to the wealth of manufacturers who have sought this territory. Opportunities have not passed, as there is still a generous supply of land which can be obtained at low figures and on easy terms.

Whose Death Occurred Feb. 18th, 1901.
Like a babe upon its mother's lap,
She on her bed of sickness lay;
As if to her no ill could hap,
She gently let death have his way.
I never saw so calm a frame
In one the crisis failed to blind,
And thought: "As death is but a name,
Or he hath left his darts behind.
Faith seemed his rival sight to bring,
That she might view the scene and see How just her boast—"Where is thy sting,
O grave, where is thy victory?"

The Doctor's Dilemma

By Hesba Stretton

CHAPTER IX.

I took care not to reach home before the hour when Julia usually went to bed. It was quite vain to think of sleep that night. I had soon worked myself up into that state of nervous, restless agitation when one cannot remain quietly in a room. About one o'clock I opened my door as softly as possible and stole at length downstairs.

Madam was my favorite mate, first-rate at a gallop when she was in good temper, but apt to turn vicious now and then. She was in good temper to-night, and pricked up her ears and whinnied when I unlocked the stable door. In a few minutes we were going up the Grange road at a moderate pace till we reached the open country.

It was a cool, quiet night in May. A few of the larger field stars twinkled palely in the sky, but the smaller ones were crowded into the full moonlight. I turned off the road to get nearer the sea, and rode along sandy lanes, with banks of turf instead of hedge rows, which were covered thickly with pale primroses, shining with the same hue as the moon above them.

Now and then I came in full sight of the sea, glittering in the silvery light. I crossed the head of a gorse, and stopped for a while to gaze down it, till my flesh crept. It was not more than a few yards in breadth, but it was of unknown depth, and the rocks stood above it with a thick, heavy blackness. The tide was rushing into its narrow channel with a thunder which throbbed like a pulse; yet in the intervals of its pulsation I could catch the thin, prattling tinkle of a brook running merrily down the gorge to plunge headlong into the sea.

As the sun rose, Sark looked very near, and the sea, a plain of silvery blue, seemed solid and firm enough to afford me a road across to it. A white mist lay like a huge snowdrift in hazy, broad curves over the Hayre Gosselin, with sharp peaks of cliffs piercing through. Olivia was sleeping yonder behind that veil of shining mist, and dear as Guernsey was to me, she was a hundred-fold dearer.

But my night's ride had not made my day's task any easier for me. No new light had dawned upon my difficulty. There was no loophole for me to escape from the most painful and perplexing strait I had ever been in. How was I to break it to Julia? and when? It was quite plain to me that the sooner it was over the better it would be for myself, and perhaps the better for her. How was I to go through my morning's calls?

I resolved to have it over as soon as breakfast was finished. Yet when breakfast came I was listening intently for some summons which would give me an hour's grace from fulfilling my own determination. I prolonged my meal, keeping my mother in her place at the table; for she had never given up her office of pouring out my tea and coffee.

I finished at last, and still no urgent message had come for me. My mother left us together alone, as her custom was, for what time I had to spare—a variable quantity always with me.

Now was the dreaded moment. But how was I to begin? Julia was so calm and unsuspecting. In what words could I convey my fatal meaning most gently to her? My head throbbed, and I could not raise my eyes to her face. Yet it must be done.

"Dear Julia," I said, in as firm a voice as I could command.

"Yes, Martin."

But just then Grace, the housemaid, knocked emphatically at the door, and after a due pause entered with a smiling, significant face, yet with an apologetic courtesy.

"If you please, Dr. Martin," she said, "I'm very sorry, but Mrs. Libou's baby is taken with convulsion fits; and they want you to go as fast as ever you can, please, sir."

"Was I sorry or glad? I could not tell. It was a relief; but then I knew positively it was nothing more than a reprieve. The sentence must be executed. Julia came to me, bent her cheek towards me, and I kissed it. That was our usual salutation when our morning's interview was ended.

"I am going down to the new house," she said. "I lost a good deal of time yesterday, and I must jog-trot up for to-day. Shall you be with me at any time, Martin?"

"Yes—no—I cannot say exactly," I stammered.

"If you are passing, will you for a few minutes," she answered, "above a thousand things to speak to that?"

I was not overflows. Lihomorning. The convulsions of A. So I have baby were not at all cheerful. I was of time to call upon Julia at her new house; but I could not slip slipped plenty courage. The morning Fort Gey was whilst I was loitering about the office, and chatting carelessly with the others (varied there.

I went down reluctantly at length to the new house; but it was at about the last hour. Dazedly, but sick at heart with myself and all the world, I went down to meet my doom.

Julia was sitting alone in the drawing room, which overlooked the harbor and the group of islands across the channel. There was no fear of interruption. It was an understood thing that at present only Julia's most intimate friends had been admitted into our new house, and then, by special invitation alone.

There was a very happy, very placid expression on her face. Every harsh line seemed softened, and a pleased smile played about her lips. Her dress was one of those simple, fresh, clean muslin gowns, with knots of ribbon about the neck, and a plain womanly, but pretty, and a pretty woman bewitching.

fore Julia's gaze as a boy, but never as I love." "Well, what is it?" she asked curiously. "The indecision of her tone brought life into me, as a probe sometimes brings a patient out of stupor."

"Julia," I said, "are you quite sure you love me enough to be happy with me as my wife?"

"I know you well enough to be as happy as the day is long with you," she replied, the color rushing to her face.

"You do not often look as if you loved me," I said at last.

"That is only my way," she answered. "I can't be soft and purring like many women. I don't care to be always kissing and hugging about anybody. But if you are afraid I don't love you enough—well! I will ask you what you think in ten years' time."

"What would you say if I told you I had once loved a girl better than I do you?" I asked.

"That's not true," she said sharply. "I've known you all your life, and you could not hide such a thing from your mother and me. You are only laughing at me, Martin."

"Heaven knows I'm not laughing," I answered solemnly. "It's no laughing matter. Julia, there is a girl I love better than you, even now."

The color and the smile faded out of her face, leaving it ashy pale. Her lips parted once or twice, but her voice failed her. Then she broke out into a short hysterical laugh.

"You are talking nonsense, dear Martin," she gasped; "you ought not. I am not very strong. Tell me it is a joke."

"I cannot," I replied, painfully and sorrowfully; "it is the truth, though I would almost rather face death than own it. I love you dearly, Julia; but I love another woman better."

There was dead silence in the room after those words. I could not hear Julia breathe or move, and I could not look at her. My eyes were turned towards the window and the islands across the sea, purple and hazy in the distance.

"Leave me," she said after a very long stillness; "go away, Martin."

"I cannot leave you alone," I exclaimed; "no, I will not, Julia. Let me tell you more; let me explain it all. You ought to know everything now."

"Go away!" she repeated, in a mechanical way.

I hesitated still, seeing her white and trembling, with her eyes glassy and fixed. But she motioned me from her towards the door, and her pale lips parted again to reiterate her command.

How I crossed that room I do not know; but the moment after I had closed the door I heard the key turn in the lock. I dared not quit the house and leave her alone in such a state; and I longed ardently to hear the clocks chime five, and the sound of Johanna's coach wheels on the rough, paved street.

That was one of the longest half hours in my life. I stood at the street door watching and waiting, and nodding to people who passed by, and who slipped at me in the most insane fashion.

The fool! I called them to myself. At length Johanna turned the corner, and her pony carriage came rattling cheerfully over the large round stones. I ran to meet her.

"For heaven's sake go to Julia!" I cried. "I have told her."

"And what does she say?" asked Johanna.

"Not a word, not a syllable," I replied, "except to bid me go away. She has looked herself into the drawing room."

"Then you had better go away altogether," she said, "and leave me to deal with her. Don't come in, and then I can say you are not here."

A friend of mine lived in the opposite house, and though I knew he was not at home I knocked at his door and asked permission to rest for a while.

The windows looked into the street, and there I sat watching the door of our new house, for Johanna and Julia to come out. At length Julia appeared, her face completely hidden behind a veil. Johanna helped her into the low carriage, as if she had been an invalid. Then they drove off, and were gone out of my sight.

By this time our dinner hour was near, and I knew my mother would be looking out for us both. I was thankful to find at the table a visitor, one of my father's old friends, a stout, round, elderly man, a loud voice and boisterous spirits, who kept up a rattle of conversation with Dr. Dobree. My mother glanced anxiously at me, but she could say little.

"Where is Julia?" she had inquired, as we sat down to dinner without her.

was several minutes before she breathed freely and naturally. Then she did not look at me, but lifted up her eyes to the pale evening sky, and her lips quivered with agitation.

"Martin, it will be the death of me," she said; and a few tears stole down her cheeks, which I wiped away.

"It shall not be the death of you," I exclaimed. "If Julia is willing to marry me, knowing the whole truth, I am ready to marry her for your sake, mother. I would do anything for your sake. But Johanna said she ought to be told, and I think it was right myself."

"Who is it, who can it be that you love?"

"Mother," I said, "I wish I had told you before, but I did not know that I loved the girl as I do till I saw her yesterday in Sark."

"That girl," she cried, "One of the Ollivers' Oh, Martin, you must marry in your own class."

"That was a mistake," I answered. "Her Christian name is Olivia; I do not know what her surname is."

"Not know even her name!" she exclaimed.

"Listen, mother," I said; and then I told her all I knew about Olivia.

"Oh, Martin, Martin!" wailed my poor mother, breaking down again suddenly. "I did so long to see you in a home of your own! And Julia was so generous, never looking as if all the money was hers, and you without a penny! What is to become of you now, my boy? I wish I had been dead and in my grave before this had happened!"

"Hush, mother!" I said, kneeling down again beside her, and kissing her tenderly. "It is still in Julia's hands. If she will marry me, I shall marry her."

"But then you will not be happy?" she said, with fresh sobs.

It was impossible for me to contradict that. I felt that no misery would be equal to that of losing Olivia. But I did my best to comfort my mother, by promising to see Julia the next day and renew my engagement, if possible.

"Try, my boy," I was informed as to what is the matter now?" broke in a shrill, cutting voice—the voice of my father. It roused us both—my mother to her usual mood of gentle submission, and me to the chronic state of irritation which his presence always provoked in me.

"Not much, sir," I answered coldly. "Only my marriage with my cousin Julia is broken off."

"Broken off!" he ejaculated, "broken off!"

CHAPTER X.

My father stood motionless for a moment. Then slowly he sank into a chair. "I am a ruined and disgraced man," he said, without looking up; "if you have broken off your marriage with Julia, I shall never raise my head again."

"But why?" I asked uneasily.

"Come down into my consulting room," he said. I went on before him, carrying the lamp, and turning round once or twice saw his face look grey, and the expression of it vacant and troubled. His consulting room was a luxurious room, elegantly furnished. He sank down into an easy chair, shivering as if we were in the depth of winter.

"Martin, I am a ruined man!" he said, for the second time.

"But how?" I asked again, impatiently.

"I dare not tell you," he cried, leaning his head upon his desk and sobbing. How white his hair was! and how aged he looked! My heart softened and warmed to him as it had not done for years.

"Father!" I said, "if you can trust any one, you can trust me. If you are ruined and disgraced I shall be the same, as your son."

"That's true," he answered, "but that's true. It will bring disgrace on you and your mother. We shall be looked at as Guernsey, where she has lived all her life; and it will be the death of her. Martin, you must save us all by making it up with Julia."

"But why?" I demanded, once more.

"I must know what you mean."

"Mean?" he said, turning upon me angrily. "You blockhead! I mean that unless you marry Julia I shall have to give an account of her property; and I could not make all square, not if I sold every stick and stone I possess."

I sat silent for a time, trying to take in this piece of information. He had been Julia's guardian ever since she was left an orphan, ten years old; but I had never known that there had not been a formal and legal settlement of her affairs when she was of age. Our family name had no blot upon it; it was one of the most honored names in the island. But if this came to light, then the disgrace would be dark indeed.

"Can you tell me all about it?" I asked.

"It would take a long time," he said, "and it would be a deuce of a nuisance. You make it up with Julia, and marry her, as you're bound to do. Of course you will manage all her money when you are her husband as you will be. Now you know all."

"But I don't know all," I replied; "and I insist upon doing so before I make up my mind what to do."

For two hours I was busy with his account. Once or twice he tried to sneak out of the room, but that I would not suffer. At length the ornamental clock on his chimney piece struck eleven, and he made another effort to beat a retreat.

"Do not go away till everything is clear," I said; "is this all?"

"All?" he repeated; "isn't it enough?"

"Between three and four thousand pounds deficient!" I answered; "it is quite enough."

"Then I am to be your scapegoat," I said.

"You are my son," he answered; "and religion (which teaches us that the sin of the fathers is visited on the children) I leave the matter in your hands. But I will answer one question: Could you show your face amongst your own friends if this were known?"

I knew very well I could not. My father, a fraudulent steward of Julia's property. Then farewell for ever to all that had made my life happy. I saw there was no escape from it—I must marry Julia.

"Well," I said at last, "as you say, the matter is in my hands now; and I must make the best of it. Good night, sir."

Only Requires Nerve.

The Forest and Stream says that nearly every one has a fear of wild animals, and yet no wild animal will fight unless wounded or cut off from all apparent avenues of escape. All animals will try and escape if given a chance.

This fear is kept up by all sorts of bear, wolf and snake stories, most of which are magnified to make heroes of hunters. There is more danger from natural causes in a visit to wild animal haunts than from the animals. There is more danger of slipping off a precipice or falling into a river than from being hurt by a bear or a wolf. Many more people have been killed by lightning than have been run over by stampeding buffalo herds, or killed by wounded grizzly bears, or by all the other animals of the prairie put together.

One might almost say that more people have been struck by falling meteorites than have been killed by panthers or wolves. And yet from day to day the newspapers continue to print bear stories, catamount stories, and wolf stories, and probably they will do so until long after the last bear, catamount and wolf shall have disappeared from the land.

Why He Got Well.

The Man with a Clear Conscience bought a pair of tan shoes with the advent of spring, and, while going home in the street car, conjured up a mental photograph of himself strolling along the sandy beach of a summer resort with his pedal extremities encased in his new purchase. That night he was taken ill. For four days he contemplated his new shoes with his head on a downy pillow. When he recovered the Man said:

"There was only one thing that worried me while I was sick. I couldn't get those tan shoes out of my head. What if I should die without having had a chance to wear 'em! Such a contingency seemed to furnish an additional and potent reason why I should get well. I just made up my mind I was going to live long enough to get my feet into those shoes and—well, I did."—New York Mail and Express.

Melissander and the Rich Man.

One of the good stories about the famous painter, Melissander, is in regard to his experience with a "new rich" gentleman who had erected a private theater at his chateau. Melissander was just then at the height of his fame, and when spending months painting pictures and selling them for about two hundred dollars a square inch. The rich man conceived the brilliant idea that what his theater most needed was a drop curtain painted by the famous Melissander. So he went to the artist's studio and proposed the matter to him.

"How large is the curtain to be?" asked the great painter. "It will be thirty feet high and thirty-four feet wide," was the reply. "My friend," said Melissander, blandly, "it will take me twenty years to paint such a curtain, and it will cost you six million dollars." This bargain was not completed.

Washington Irving's Love Story.

Washington Irving always remained single because Matilda Hoffman, the beautiful girl to whom he was engaged, died of consumption in her seventeenth year. He says: "I was by her when she died, and was the last she ever looked upon." He took her Bible and prayerbook away with him, sleeping with them under his pillow, and in all his subsequent travels they were his inseparable companions. Not until thirty years after her death did any one venture to speak of her to him. He was visiting her father, and one of her nieces, taking some music from a drawer, brought with it a piece of embroidery. "Washington," said Mr. Hoffman, "this was from Matilda's work." The effect was electric. He had been talking gaily the moment before, but became silent and soon left the house.

Forment.

A little school girl told her teacher to write the word "ferment" on her slate, together with the definition and a sentence in which the word was used. The following is the result: "F-er-m-e-n-t; a verb signifying to work. I love to do all kinds of fancy ferment."—London King.

THE "RST" IN CAMP.

CHICAGO GIMENT'S ANNUAL VISIT (SPRINGFIELD).

City Soldiers' Camp Lincoln, Near State Capitol—Scenes Before the Departure Arriving Reaching Destination—Private's Drowned in Pool.

Office, stood factory in Chicago swung doors open the other day and out of them poured 600 happy soldiers, boys, and men, like, strong and all. They were the rank and file of the First Regiment, Illinois National Guard. They had leaves of absence for a week from employment amid the heat and noise of the city. What was more, there still on the pay rolls of their employers. Before them lay a week of life at Camp Lincoln, near Springfield.

Michigan was had a warlike aspect that evening in their march from the arm to the Illinois Central station to take train. In full equipment of arms, accoutrements, the "thin blue line" down the avenue to the music he band.

Hundreds of persons gathered at the armory to bid the soldiers good-by, as company after company marched forth and fell into line behind the band. It was a reminder of the early days of the Spanish war, except that the prevailing spirit was of fun and good nature, unmingled with tears and sighs.

Two special lines of a dozen coaches each carried regiment to Springfield. At 9:15 the 1st section, carrying the First Battalion, moved out of the train shed, and the train followed a half hour later. Two trains carried about 600 members of the regiment, the twelve companies being separately represented.

For the first time in several years the soldiers took Springfield their full dress uniforms—consisting of gray swat-low-tailed coat, dark trousers, and white spliced belt. These were worn every day at dress parade at sundown. As there were thirty-two brass buttons on each coat and every one must be polished daily, the soldiers did not lack for things to do in camp.

Arriving shortly after 6 o'clock on Saturday the 800th of the command had installed themselves in their quarters, been served breakfast and were drilling upon parade ground in battalion formation before 8 o'clock.

The rifle range at Camp Lincoln was closed during the first three weeks of the encampment. The Chicago regiments taking their place on the range at Camp Logan. The routine included squad, company, battalion and regimental drills.

Drum Major C. Chitt, who has spent years in a service, was happily surprised Saturday night when he was presented with a twelve and fifteen-year-service medal to replace the ones lost by him in the Fourth Regiment Army in 1891. The presentation was made by the officers of the staff, the non-commissioned staff and the members of the drum corps. Col. Sanborn making the address.

Private George Stow, a member of company K, deceased in the swimming pool Saturday afternoon, causing sorrow among members of the regiment on the opening day of the annual encampment.

The drowning occurred under peculiar circumstances. Twenty-five or thirty men were in the water at the time, yet no one saw the young man sink or heard an outcry from him. It is theorized that he was hurt in falling or came up under a raft used from a pond and was unable to free himself from the incumbrance. Stow was not used from his companions until his death. H. L. Stow, a member of the same company, left the pool to dress, the clothes of the unfortunate soldier lying where he had undressed. Telling his comrades of the fact, the younger men ran to the camp, half a mile away, to notify Capt. G. H. Herman, his commanding officer, of the drowning.

In the meantime expert swimmers instituted a search for the body, and within a short time Private Roder of company G located it. Private Albert Grubbs of company K sought the body to the surface, and was the aid of William Capt. of company K, who was carried ashore. Capt. Robert M. Lieut. Walls, regimental surgeon, worked with the body for over an hour but were unable to rekindle a spark of life.

Sunday was solemnized by a raid upon a "blind pig" that had been established in the woods a quarter of a mile from camp. Col. Sanborn, commander of the First Regiment, was informed of the establishment, and directed that a detail be sent to guard the vicinity and arrest every soldier who attempted to visit the place. A detail of six men in command of a sergeant equipped themselves with blankets and provisions, preparatory to an extended stay, but when they established themselves near the resort the proprietor decided to suspend operations and avoid trouble. It was intended to secure sufficient evidence to convict the keeper and then confiscate his stock under the provisions of the military code of the State.

Meanwhile, the members of the Naval Militia had begun their first summer

New England Women

Have an Abiding Faith in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

After years of struggle attain and merit public confidence, with a firm and steadfast belief that the time would come when the truth, good faith, and honesty would prevail, which we know we possess, what a genuine satisfaction it is to find, and to realize the uplifting influence of the merited confidence of a woman of our fellow beings.

Thus stands the Pinkham name in New England, and all over America, and nowhere is the faith Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound greater than in New England, it is. Merit, and merit alone, can gain this.

ORGANIC INFLAMMATION.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—I was troubled very badly with inflammation of the bladder, which in bed with it. I had two doctors but they did me no good. A friend gave me Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it helped me. I have now taken three bottles of it and I am entirely cured. It is a good medicine for any woman, and I would commend it to any one suffering as I was. I think, if most of the women could take more of your medicine instead of going to the doctors, they would be better off. The Compound has also cured my husband of kidney trouble."

PAINFUL PERIODS.

"I cannot help but feel that it is my duty to do something in regard to recommending your wonderful medicine. I must say it is the greatest medicine on earth, and I have advised a great many suffering with female troubles to take it. I tell people I wish I could go on the platform and lecture on it."

"My trouble was painful menstruation. The suffering I endured cannot describe. I was treated by one of our most prominent physicians here for five months, and found myself getting worse instead of better. At the end of the fifth month he told me he had done all he could for me, and that I had better go to the hospital. My sister advised me to try your Vegetable Compound, as it cured her of backache. I did so, and took it faithfully, and am now cured of my trouble, and in perfect health, many thanks to your medicine. I cannot praise it enough, and would recommend it to all who suffer from any female weakness."—Mrs. H. S. BALL, 461 Orchard St., New Haven, Conn.

$5000 REWARD.—We have deposited with the City Bank of New York, $5000, which will be paid to any person who can find the above testimonial letters are not genuine, or were published before obtaining the written special permission of LYDIA E. PINKHAM MEDICINE CO.

NERVOUS PROSTRATION.

"For two years I suffered from nervous prostration, the result of female weakness. I had hemorrhoids very badly, and at times menstruation would be obliged to go to bed. Also suffered with headache, pain across back, and in lower part of abdomen. I was so discouraged. I had read of Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound, and concluded to give it a trial. I wrote to Mrs. Pinkham and received a very nice letter in return. I began at once the use of her Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier and am now feeling splendid. I have more pain at monthly periods, and my own work, and have gained ten pounds. I would not be without your Vegetable Compound. It is a splendid medicine. I am very thankful for what has done for me."—Mrs. J. W. J. B. CAROLINA Ave., Jamaica Plain, Mass.

If Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will cure these women—why not you? You cannot tell until you try it. If you are ill, and really want to get well, commence its use once, and do not let any drug clerk persuade you that he has something else which is better, for that is absurd. Ask him to produce the evidence we do.

ENDEAVORERS MEET.

GREAT ANNUAL CONVENTION HELD IN CINCINNATI.

Twentieth International Gathering of Christian Young People Is Attended by Thousands—Services in Many Halls and Churches.

The twentieth annual convention of the Young People's Christian Endeavor societies at Cincinnati was international as well as inter-denominational, and a great gathering of the world were in attendance to the number of nearly thirty thousand. There is no other kind of convention whatsoever that draws together each year so vast a concourse of people. Nor is there any great popular gathering which is attended with more enthusiasm.

After the business sessions of Saturday and the evangelist and other mass meetings of Sunday, the regular programs of the convention of the Christian Endeavor were begun Monday. Several of the largest churches in the central part of the city were used in addition to Odeon Hall, and the three large auditoriums heretofore used for exposition purposes.

No event of the year has greater significance in the religious world than the annual convention of this society. Certainly no religious movement of modern times has so thoroughly enlisted the sympathy of those who, while having no denominational affiliations, recognize the ethical power and uplifting influence of Christianity. There are many reasons for this. Chief among them, no doubt, is the undenominational character of the organization. Its membership now embraces forty denominations of the evangelical church, reaching into all lands where Christianity has an organized following.

Some idea of the phenomenal growth of the organization may be gained from the fact that it now has 61,427 societies with a total membership of nearly four million, while in 1891 at the close of the first decade of Christian Endeavor there were only 10,274 societies with a membership of a million. Nothing comparable to this growth can be found in the history of religious movements.

This great social-religious movement was started in Portland, Me., twenty years ago. The Rev. Francis B. Clark, then a young Congregational pastor in that city, was its originator, as Robert Haines had been of the new Sunday school movement in Gloucester, England, just one hundred years before, and as Mr. George Williams, in London, was of the Young Men's Christian Association just fifty years ago.

Each one of these three distinct forms of religious association and organized effort for children and young people came into being not because of any theory, but to meet what were felt to be the necessities of a condition. In neither case did the new organization have any kind of ecclesiastical origin. No form of popular evolution in its inception could have been more spontaneous, simpler, or less ostentatious.

It is a remarkable fact that over against the multiplication of sectarian independencies and differing denominations in modern times there have sprung into power three great unsectarian and inter-denominational forms of Christian association, which are making so irresistibly for a new fellowship of the freest and broadest character.

The better element in the modern phenomenal development of vast commercial and industrial combinations had already been anticipated in these young people's Christian associations and societies. One year ago the international Christian Endeavor convention was held in London. Exeter Hall, Albert Hall, and Alexandra palace were scarcely able to accommodate the large assemblies.

There were officially reported 60,172 different societies, with a total membership of 3,500,000. Of these societies 44,202 were in the United States; in England, 7,000; Australia, 4,000; India, 430; China, 148; Japan, 73; Africa, 69; Germany, 103; Madagascar, 13; Turkey, 60. Besides these nearly four millions of the so-called Christian Endeavorers were in fellowship with the United C. E. Society. Whether of note is the spontaneity and freedom which characterize this immense organization. Nothing could be more democratic. The great conventions do not enact a particle of legislation; do not even adopt resolutions. The utterances, the discussions, the demonstrations go for what they are worth. The organizing principles of the society are clearly enough defined, and these are left to make their own headway.

The United Society, of which Dr. Francis E. Clark is still the head, neither assumes nor exercises any authority over the local societies. It gathers statistics, gives information, publishes a newspaper, and in these and other ways keeps alive the sense of universal fellowship. It manages and provides for the great annual conventions, and thus undoubtedly exerts an influence to prepare the younger men and women in all the churches for the larger and yet closer federation which the new times are demanding. After this the international conventions of the society are to be held only once in two years.

A Mean Feminine Trick.

This edifying conversation was heard on a Norristown train. The two girls were rather pretty, and one of them carried a novel from the free library, says the Philadelphia Record. First girl: "So your engagement is broken off?" Second girl: "Yes, I broke it off last Wednesday night." First girl: "But you still have that beautiful ring. Didn't he expect you to return it to him?" Second girl: "I suppose he did, but I got around that matter splendidly. I have half a mind to tell you all about it." First girl: "Oh, yes, do tell me!" Second girl: "Well, I will. You see, I knew I should throw him over on Wednesday night, so that afternoon I bought from a faker on 8th street a 10-cent ring that resembled this one considerably. I wore the 10-cent ring in the evening. We were sitting on the front porch, and just as I had hoped, we had a dreadful quarrel. 'I'm done with you now!' I said. And I took off the ring and threw it out in the middle of the street. A trolley car came along and passed over it. 'There is your ring,' I said. 'Go hunt for it if you want it.' 'Oh, it doesn't matter about the ring,' he said. 'I wasn't thinking of the ring. Mary, you were wise to throw it away, for it is of no value to either of us now.' Then he went away, little suspecting the trick I had played on him. He was easy, wasn't he?" First girl: "Wasn't he easy, though?"

A Brother's Love.

Lostart, Ill., July 8.—James Watt, of this place, by one little act, has given a splendid example of that never dying love which exists between brothers, no matter how far apart they may be.

Mr. Watt was a great sufferer from Kidney Trouble and Nervousness. He was very much used up, and although he had tried a great many things, he had found nothing that would in any way relieve him. Some one suggested Dodd's Kidney Pills, and he used six boxes, and was completely cured.

His first thought was for a brother in Belfast, Ireland, whom he knew to be afflicted in the same way that he had been. Mr. Watt immediately sent a supply of Dodd's Kidney Pills to this far away brother, together with his recommendation based on his fortunate experience.

Obituary.
Mrs. Sophia E. Lieber, of Kenosha, mother of Albert J. and George Lieber of this city, died at 1:30 o'clock Wednesday morning at the Galesburg Sanitarium. Death resulted from a complication of troubles centering in tuberculosis of the system, which started from tuberculosis of the neck glands. She has been ill for a couple of years. Six weeks ago she came to Galesburg for a visit at the home of her son, Albert Lieber. A week later she was taken to the Sanitarium. She did not improve, and sank steadily to the end.

She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Collier, and she was born in Sangamon, Ohio, county, N. Y., August 3, 1851. When three years of age she came with the family to Antioch, Ill., and the greater part of the remainder of her life was spent there. Since she was eighteen years of age she has been a member of the Baptist church. Her acquaintance in and about Antioch was very large.

She was married thirty-one years ago to Edwin Lieber, who died in 1889. DROWNED WHILE BATHING.

Raymond Foster Meets Death in Lake
Marie.

Raymond Foster, the sixteen-year old son of Prof. Foster of the Chicago University, was drowned in Lake Marie yesterday.

The particulars as we learn them are as follows: Young Foster was a guest of Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Parker and in company with a son of Mr. Parker went out bathing using a cedar log as a diving board. After the boys had been in the water for some time young Parker started for the bath house after telling his companion that he was going to shore. Foster, it seems, swam out into deeper water and was evidently taken with cramps and sank to the bottom.
Parker heard his cries but could not reach him in time to render any assistance.

A searching party was at once organized and the search for the body kept up until about eleven o'clock last night when the body was found in about seven feet of water.

Undertaker James was called and the body prepared for burial when, after the Coroner's inquest, it will be shipped to New York for interment.

Absolute Zero.

Absolute zero is the point at which,
as has been determined from experiments with gases, matter would be without a trace of heat—could be cooler no farther. This point is 273 degrees below centigrade zero. A degree of cold so intense as this is, however, absolutely unobtainable.

Women as Curates.

One of the Liverpool clergy of the established church of England is trying to employ church women as regular supplementary curates, and he suggests that much organizing work of the parish might be better done by women than by clergymen. He declares that he can get three women to work for the price of one curate and to do three times the work.

PERVEX SYRUP CO.

Dear Sir:—for the past 10 years I was troubled with my stomach. About 4 years ago was taken down with rheumatism; was not able to do a day's work for 3 years.
All medicine seemed of no benefit to me. A year ago I was advised to take Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. I truly believe I would have died but for this medicine.
My rheumatism is entirely gone and my stomach is in good condition. It has saved my life and I cannot recommend it too highly.

Yours respectfully,
ELWOOD MCORACKEN.
